The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

King John's Lost Treasure.

The idea of making use of the electric apparatus used in locating ores to discover King John's lost treasure has been put forward by Capt. Hugh Pollard in an English paper. He recalls the fact that, several years ago, Sir William Hope informed the Society of Antiquaries that the ford of the Wash where the treasure was lost in the thirteenth century was reclaimed in the seventeenth, and that the land lies between Walpole and Long Sutton in Lincolnshire. Now this treasure of King John's is of extraordinary interest. Not only did it contain loot from half the castles and churches of England and John's own jewels, but the crown of King Alfred as well. At the close of the seventeenth century King Alfred's jewel, now in the Ashmolean Museum, was found some distance north of the site of Athelney Abbey in Somersetshire. The gem is made of pure gold and contains colored stones covered by a thick crystal, through which is seen the miniature of a man clothed in a green Saxon tunic. It is formed of enameled mosaic on a blue ground. The man is seated on a throne with a crown on his head and holds a fleur-de-lis in each hand. Round the edge are the words in Anglo-Saxon: "Alfred had me worked." Some say the figures represent Alfred himself. If so, perhaps the crown which the gem depicts is the one which the elements wrenched from the unworthy hands of John all that long time ago, and the one which, it is to be hoped, the twentieth century will recover.

Rush for Canada Large.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Brig.-Gen. R. Premier Tumbles; Wrenches Tendon.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 19. — In leaving the Halifax dock last night the Prince of Wales on the Renown this evening Sir Robert Borden slipped on the stairs and wrenched a muscle in his leg. Dr. Edward Farrell was called and found that while the injury was painful it was not serious. Sir Robert proceeded to the ship.

PRINCE IS IN HALIFAX

Heir Apparent Welcomed to the Capital of Nova Scotia.

The Ceremony Took Place at the Provincial Building and the Prince of Wales Also Visited Devastated District — An Informal Interlude Gave Delightful Variety to Day.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 19. — His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was given an enthusiastic welcome by the Province of Nova Scotia when he left the dockyard Monday afternoon and subsequently drove in procession through three miles of gaily bedecked streets lined with veterans of the great war to the Provincial Building, where he received and replied to addresses from the province and Corporation of Halifax.

The prince landed at the dockyard promptly at 10 o'clock, and as he stepped off the wooden slab which marked the landing of the late King Edward VII, on July 30, 1860, the royal standard was hoisted at the landing stage masthead, the band of the Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery played the National Anthem, and the guns of the citadel boomed out a royal salute.

The prince remained standing at the salute until the National Anthem and them had been concluded and then greeted Lieutenant-Governor Grant, Premier Murray, Gen. Benson, Capt. Walter Howe, superintendent of the dockyard, officers of the Italian and French warships, the Mayor of Halifax and other officials. Sir Robert Borden was not present owing to his injured ankle.

The prince then inspected the guard of honor, which had been supplied by the Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery, stepping to chat with several of the men who were decorations.

More magnificent in its military and naval trappings, more formal, more spread out, Halifax's reception of the Prince of Wales lacked the concentrated spontaneous enthusiasm that celebrated the visit of its sister city, St. John last Friday. The cities are differently laid out, but St. John's chief street is short and narrow, and into which the people poured to crowd their enthusiasm. Here the long narrow, up-and-down streets made the reception a mile upon a mile a string of scattered cheers. At the historic Provincial Building hundreds choked the streets and the areas of waving flags and real cheers greeted the heir to the throne as he swung round the corner of George street into Hollis.

The most interesting feature of his drive round the city was his visit to the dockyard area. By a freak of history's wheel the visit of the late King Edward VII in 1860 was made shortly after a great fire that swept Halifax.

Formality was thrown to the winds when the Prince of Wales was made a member of the Studley Quoit Club late in the afternoon. He was proclaimed "A jolly good fellow," and enjoyed it to the hilt.

The president, C. E. Dodwell, made a humorous speech, referring to the prince's achievements, told how he had been raised from the ranks of the bench in ten minutes and had taken on another "sublime degree" recently that of "Older Brother of the Trinity." He was not going to ask him to lay any foundation stones or unveil monuments, but simply to tell His Majesty that the club was going strong and that his was one of the functions with which he was not bored after.

The prince, standing out under the shadow of the trees drinking the punch for which the club is famous, laughed very heartily when he told my father that I saw the boss," he said in reply, referring to John T. Wilde, the 93-year-old man who had founded the club and became its president for many years, who had been presented to him.

Mr. Wilde, a bowed, shaking old figure had taken the prince into his confidence. The old man had entertained the present King on three occasions. "Tell your father that I've saw me," he urged the prince. "Tell him you saw the boss. He will know me."

"I will," replied the heir to the throne very gently to the old man.

The old man explained that the prince's mother was the only lady who had ever visited the place. The prince was much amused.

After the ceremony the prince signed the visitor's book smoking a cigarette and laughing heartily when some one shouted out, "that's called signing the pledge with a pen."

During his visit to the devastated area the prince went into the home of Mrs. Mary Rankine, a young woman of about forty years of age, whose husband is on the Niobe and who was badly hurt during the disaster. Her face was injured and her leg so cut up that she will be a cripple for life. The prince asked her to tell him all about it. Last night, before morning when the disaster came. After hearing the woman's story and asking many questions he said: "This was such a terrible thing to have happened. My heart goes out to you and to the people of the city."

What War Cost British.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The war cost forty billion pounds, Premier Lloyd George declared in his speech in the House of Commons on the financial and industrial situation. Most of this sum was spent for purposes of destruction.

The Premier asserted that the changing from war to peace conditions would take longer than the change from peace to war. The first outstanding fact of the present situation was the alarming adverse trade balance.

The import restrictions which will terminate September 1, the Premier continued, had given British manufacturers an opportunity of making and dealing in goods which otherwise would have been hurried here from foreign countries.

William's Chance.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Wagers have been laid here at 7 to 5 that the ex-Kaiser will not be brought to trial. Immediately after Lord Carson in the the House of Lords recently showed such apathy about the question of the ex-Kaiser's fate, the odds became 2 to 1. They narrowed, however, when Bonar Law said the government had not changed its mind. Lloyd's brokers seem to have no interest in the former ruler's future, and no quotations are available on the possibility of his trial being abandoned.

TROUBLE OVER M.S.A.

Guelph Novitiate Charges to be Investigated.

Hon. Justices Middleton and Chisholm Have Been Appointed a Special Commission to Enquire Into the Allegation That the Department of Justice Interfered With the Administration of Act.

OTTAWA, Aug. 19.—Hon. Justice W. E. Middleton, of the Ontario Supreme Court, and Hon. Joseph A. Chisholm, of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, it is officially announced, have been named by the Dominion Government, a royal commission to probe charges made by the Rev. Kennedy H. Palmer, of Guelph, Ont., and any other specific charges in regard to the Guelph Novitiate. The trouble over the Novitiate, it will be recalled, arose when Capt. A. C. MacAuley, on the night of June 7; 1917, visited the institution for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not any of its inmates were evading military service.

The order-in-council naming the commission recalls that Hon. Arthur Meighen, as acting Minister of Justice, stated (Mr. Meighen's words of a debate in the Commons on April 7 last, on a motion made by Sir Sam Hughes) that the commission would be named to inquire into the matter, recites the principal charges made by Rev Mr. Palmer and Sir Sam Hughes in his speech and proceeds:

"In view of the foregoing, the Minister recommends that the Hon. Justice W. E. Middleton, a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and Hon. Mr. Justice Joseph A. Chisholm, a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, be appointed commissioners under the Inquiry Act to inquire into and report the facts bearing upon the allegations in said charges and enumerated statements so far as they involve allegations of improperty and misconduct on the part of the Minister of Justice, the Department of Justice, the Minister of Militia, or the Department of Militia, and to submit with their report the evidence to be taken in the case for the information of Your Excellency-in-Council."

The enquiry by the royal commission will be instituted as soon as Deputy Minister Newcombe, of the Department of Justice, returns to the city, and will be in almost immediately. It is expected that the commission will hold sittings both in Ottawa and Guelph.

The allegations of Rev. Mr. Palmer to be enquired into include:

"(1) The Department of Justice and Militia interfered with the military board at Guelph in their efforts to obtain information as to the status of the inmates of Guelph Novitiate.

"(2) That in direct violation of agreement extended special privileges to the institution, which should have been treated like any other institution.

"(3) That the Hon. C. J. Doherty interfered with Capt. A. C. MacAuley on the night of June 7, 1917, while (Capt. MacAuley) was carrying out the instructions of his superior officers.

"(4) That the Department of Justice, through its Minister, prevented the placing in military service of young men of military age residing in the institution.

"(5) That the press censorship instituted by a Minister of the Crown intensified the feeling that special protection was being given to the institution at Guelph."

Statements made by Sir Sam Hughes, which are enumerated as specific charges to be enquired into, will be placed by the order-in-Council as follows:

1. That the Government improperly failed to make the occupants of the Novitiate register for military examination or for military service under the M.S.A., and the Government failed to enforce those harboring deserters in the Novitiate.

2. A member of the Government (Mr. Guthrie) informed a member of the Military Service Council that "Doherty says they are all right and that they are to be left alone."

3. That the Government improperly communicated with MacAuley.

4. After midnight the Militia Department communicated with MacAuley and improperly ordered him to retire from the Novitiate.

5. The Department improperly ordered the press censorship.

6. The Minister of Militia apologized to the principal of the Novitiate and indirectly censured MacAuley when the order should have been to the principal to observe the law.

7. Godson. Godson visited London as it is claimed improperly and destroyed certain confidential letters removed from the military files there.

8. MacAuley was improperly moved to Winnipeg by the Militia Department.

GENERAL CURRIE BACK

Canadian Commandant Is Given a Welcome Home.

He Was Deeply Affected By the Manner In Which the Military, Naval and Civic Authorities of Halifax Received Him — Piece of Silver Plate, Suitably Engraved, Given by Citizens.

HALIFAX, Aug. 19.—Early Sunday morning, so early that the mass of citizens of Halifax were abed and recked little of what was happening, Halifax welcomed back to the homeland Lieut.-Gen. Sir Arthur Currie, gallant soldier and commandant of one of the most daring and glorious bodies of troops in world history—the Canadian Army Corps.

Gen. Currie arrived here on the Cunard liner Caronia, which docked at 6 o'clock. At twenty minutes to eight, just before he boarded his private car, which was attached to the Ocean Limited at the South End Station, he was presented upon by representatives of the Civic Corporation and of the Provincial Government, and presented with an address and a piece of plate. There were nearly a hundred persons of prominence in military and civil circles. Shortly after seven the guard of honor, supplied by the Royal Canadian Regiment and accompanied by a portion of its band, arrived and stationed itself opposite the front of the depot.

Sir Arthur and his party reached the station at twenty minutes to eight. Three cars made up the procession. The general occupied the first, with his small son, an embryo hero in a smart Glengarry uniform, and Brig.-Gen. Thacker, G.O.C., M.D. No. 6. As the automobiles passed the guard of honor of the men saluted briskly.

Upon alighting, Sir Arthur spoke first to Col. Hill, and was then introduced to the Lieutenant-Governor. Accompanied by Gen. Thacker and Col. Hill, he inspected the guard. Returning to the platform, Sir Arthur sought out the faces of those whom he knew among the onlookers.

"Hello, Borden!" — he dived into the crowd to wring the hand of Col. Allison Borden, former commandant of the 85th Nova Scotia Highlanders. The presentation took place of the piece of plate, a handsome silver salver, engraved with the city coat of arms and an inscription very appropriate to the occasion. Mayor Parker spoke first.

"Sir Arthur Currie," he said, "it gives me very great pleasure to welcome you to Halifax, the gateway of Canada. My only regret it that your stay here could not have been longer, as we should very much like to give a reception befitting such a gallant soldier."

Mr. Monaghan then read the civic address.

In making his reply the famous warrior was deeply affected, and at times was obliged to grope for words with which to express his emotions.

"Mr. Mayor, ladies and gentlemen," he said, "it is hard to find words satisfactory to thank you for this extreme kindness. I feel getting home so keenly that words don't seem to come to me. What I do and will appreciate the most—and it was borne in upon me this morning is by the kindness I have received and the familiar faces I have seen—is the privilege of renewing acquaintance and comradeship with those with whom I have been so closely associated during the past five years.

"No city in the Dominion," he continued, "knows war as well as Halifax. You have seen them go, you have seen them coming home again, and you have contributed a large number of men yourselves. There were no units in the corps which were more conspicuous or in which I placed more reliance than the R.C.R. the 25th, and, one which was among the latest but of which I was always very proud, the 85th, and contributed first by Col. Borden, whom I am happy to see to-day, and Col. Ralston, one of the best Canadian soldiers."

Sir Arthur concluded by thanking the people of Halifax for their kindness to him. It was the first token of the kind that he had ever received.

Lady Currie was presented with a bouquet of flowers by Mrs. Parker on behalf of the women of Halifax.

Cheers were given for Sir Arthur, and the Lieutenant-Governor led a second rousing trio for Lady Currie.

A Bird Refuge.

The most important, and by far the largest in extent, of national "refuges" for the preservation of wild birds on this continent is a vast area in the delta of the Yukon river, proclaimed as such by an edict from the White House not just ten years ago. It is even more beneficial to the birds of Canada than to those of the United States.

It is an area approximately equal to Massachusetts, and the most valuable feathered species concerned are the various kinds of ducks, which breed there in countless numbers.

There is found the proper home of the "emperor" geese, the "white-fronted" goose, and many species of ducks which are sought as game in other latitudes.

The region is known as "tundra country"—devoid of trees, swampy, with many lakes, and of no possible usefulness for grazing cattle or any other purpose. If, however, the wildfowl are there safeguarded on their breeding grounds, they will be in permanent source of game and food supply for Alaska and the entire Pacific coast.

In order that this may come to pass, it is necessary that the birds shall be protected during the mating season against the wholesale slaughter which formerly was conducted by pot-hunters and alleged sportsmen from year to year—a method commonly adopted being to drive the helpless creatures into pens built for the purpose, where they were ruthlessly murdered.

Advertising!

THE biggest men in the country have found that the easiest way to spell success is to A-D-V-E-R-T-I-S-E. Suppose the newspaper did not publish the news, how would the people know what is happening? If you don't publish the Store News how will the people know about your goods? You can never sell the goods people do not know you have.

Advertising is telling about your stock. The firm that advertises gets ahead, every time, of the firm that does not advertise. Shop-worn and out-of-date stock is the penalty merchants pay for not advertising.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Miss Kelly Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous break-down and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for three years. A girl friend had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss Flo Kelly, 478 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, assisted to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

Canada Leads.

A paragraph appearing in Repatriation, a monthly bulletin published in the interests of returned men in Australia, quotes the speech delivered in Sydney by Premier Holman, of New South Wales, in which he stated that the state had settled 1,100 men on the land. The Premier claimed that this was a much larger number than had been settled in any of the other states. New South Wales sent to the battlefields of Europe thirteen per cent. of the total of the Australian Expeditionary Force. If the proportion of ex-service men settled in the land settlement states was equal to that of New South Wales the figures would be for the whole of Australia 2,820 men benefitted by the Land Settlement Act up to the date of the Premier's speech.

Up to the 17th of May, the Soldier Settlement Board of Canada had approved 7,900 applications for the benefits of the Soldier Settlement Act and a great many more applications were before the Qualification Committees in the various provinces. These figures which will be largely augmented by the returns for the last two weeks of May and for the present month show that Canada is well in advance of the sister dominion-wealth in providing suitable farms for her war heroes.

A MYSTERIOUS MEMORIAL

Stonehenge, on Salisbury Plain, Dates Back to 1700 Years B.C.

Stonehenge, the greatest and oldest of the nation's memorials, situated on Salisbury Plain, has been presented to Great Britain by its owner. As the remains of a lost gone-by civilization, Stonehenge has a value and an interest equalled by no other monument in the United Kingdom.

The historic monument is composed of huge stones, some of them weighing tons, and in each instance piled one atop of another. How the great blocks were got to their positions, or their age or purpose is a mystery, but it is believed that the monument dates from as early as 1700 B.C. It has been a place of pilgrimage for generations.

Evelyn and Pepys, Johnson, Emerson and other great men visited it, and some of them left records of the impression which the great stones made upon them. Johnson pointed a delightful contrast between the Cathedral of Salisbury (the spire of which can be seen from the Plain) and "those girt big stones" as they are called by the natives.

Johnson said: "These were two eminent monuments of art and rudeness, exhibiting the first essay and the last perfection in architecture." Evelyn, it is evident from a remark in his diary, made an unsuccessful attempt to count the stones. "To number them exactly," he wrote, "is very difficult; they lie in such variety of posture and confusion, though they seemed to exceed 100; we counted only 95."

Pepys found the stones "so prodigious as any tales I have ever heard of them. God knows what their use was." One large stone, known as the "leaning stone," was, in 1901, restored to the perpendicular. During the excavations made then a number of implements were found, believed to have been used by the builders. They were of stone and flint.

Under various private ownerships the ancient memorial has been wrangled over in the courts, robbed of its trilithons to make bridges and mill dams, and allowed to suffer needless damage from storm and relic hunters, and has been either a white elephant or a mere source of gain.

One can learn all about nursing not only in the hospital but in the home, by reading a new book just out, which teaches all there is to know about nursing except the practical experience. This book, called "Nursing in the Home," is written for the ordinary reader, contains five hundred pages, many illustrations, and is nicely bound. It contains chapters on Emergencies, First Aid, Care of the Wounded, Burns, Scalds, Broken Legs, Arms, Advice for Mothers and How to Care for Infants, How to Recognize Different Diseases, Taking Temperature, etc.

The home nurse will find within its pages reliable up-to-date instruction for caring for the sick, and the professional nurse will renew her hospital training. Such a book usually sells for $1.50, and every woman should have a copy for ready reference. Your druggist has it for sale for a limited time for 50 cents, or send 50 cents to the World's Medical Press, 654 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y. Edition limited.

Notice to the Public.
This is to advise you that a number of canvassers from the U. S. A., are soliciting subscriptions for a paper called "The Veteran's Journal," which is printed in Pittsburg, Pa. We wish to warn the public locally, that this publication has no connection whatever with the "Veteran" which is owned and controlled by the G. W. V. A. of Canada. Further it seems to us that such a title as the "Veteran's Journal," is calculated to mislead the public and so secure subscriptions which are probably intended for our own paper, "The Veteran."

H. S. Pringle was chosen by the City Council, of Victoria, B. C., in secret session for the position of City Solicitor which will be vacated at the end of the month by R. W. Hannington. The monthly salary provided by the Council for Mr. Pringle is 300. Mr. Hannington has been receiving $350 since the finding of the Burns Arbitration Board was enforced. Before engaging in the profession Mr. Pringle was a member of the High School Faculty. As a lawyer he is well known and latterly has been the senior partner of the firm of Pringle & Whittaker, Central Building. Recently he made a trip to Pekin, China, on legal business. Saved from drowning.
The following was taken from The Watertown Daily Standard, August 18th: Wm. G. Lewis, electrical engineer of Knowlton Brothers, Inc., had a narrow escape from being drowned at the sixth annual outing of the Knowlton Brothers Cooperative Association at Clayton Park, Saturday. His coolness and the quick action of some of his associates when his predicament was discovered is all that saved him. The swimming events on the dock had just been called and many had crowded on the docks to watch them when the incident occurred. No alarm was given and only those on the chute learned of the closeness of an accident marring the success of the occasion. Mr. Lewis put on a bathing suit and went to the top of one of the chutes and got into a toboggan and down he shot. He did not know that he was being dashed into water far above his head. When he came to a stop he discovered he could not touch bottom and down he went. He held his breath until he got to the top again and the next time he took in plenty of water. He was going down the third time when help reached him. When he was seen to strike the water one of the boys knew he could not swim and shouted for Arthur Dickens in the water to rescue him, while several others hastened to get there. Dickens is a good strong swimmer and he reached Lewis in time to drag him to safety. Lewis kept his head and made it easy for Dickens to swim to shore with him in one arm. After that Lewis again went down the same chute but made advance arrangements to have his friends there to pull him to shore. He had been seized with a cramp in the struggle. That he had plenty of nerve was evident, but that he should have swimming lessons to go with it he could not deny. He said the water he swallowed was somewhat distasteful, but otherwise he enjoyed his plunge in the river. The incident was kept very quiet until the day was over, only a few knowing that anything had happened.

WILL PRAISE IT ALL OF HER LIFE

Mrs. Edwards has Gained Fourteen Pounds by Taking Tanlac.

I weigh just fourteen pounds more than I did when I started taking Tanlac a short time ago, and my troubles have been completely overcome," said Mrs. Nancy Edwards, who lives at 5620 East 12th street, Kansas City, Mo., while talking to a Tanlac representative the other day.

"About two years ago," continued Mrs. Edwards, "I began to have stomach trouble, and until I commenced taking Tanlac, my condition had gradually grown worse all the time. In fact, I had reached the point where I was so weak and run down that I was hardly able to get about. Everything I ate disagreed with me, and for gas that formed from sour, undigested food, would make me miserable for hours at a time. I would have raging headaches nearly every day and was so nervous all the time that the least noise would upset me, and when night came on it was a hard matter for me to get off to sleep. I often had such bad dizzy spells that I could hardly stand upon my feet. The different medicines and treatments I tried didn't do me any good at all.

My daughter had been taking Tanlac, and it had done her so much good that I decided to give it a trial myself, and I can honestly state that by the time I had finished my first bottle I was feeling like a different person. Well, I just kept on getting better, and now since taking three or four bottles of Tanlac, I am enjoying the best of health in every way. I never had a better appetite, and what I eat agrees with me perfectly, and I never have a sign of indigestion or stomach trouble of any kind. The nervousness has left me, and I get plenty of good sound sleep every night, and I have gained so much in weight and strength that I can do all my housework without the least trouble. Those awful headaches are gone, too, and that alone would make me praise Tanlac the longest day I live."

Two automobiles were stolen at Odessa last Saturday night, one belonging to Mr. McGaughey and one to D. C. Smith. One car was later recovered in Brockville, where it had been abandoned by the thieves, who stole another car there and were later apprehended in Cornwall, which car abandoned by them in Odessa was later recovered, which had been stolen by them in Toronto. The three men are held in Cornwall on a charge of stealing a car and breaking into a store. The other car was recovered in Montreal, but the thieves got away.

The attempted highway robbery took place at Odessa on Saturday evening last, when W. Frink, a store keeper, was going home with his cash box under his arm. His daughter was with him and her screaming scared the would be robber and as he fired the revolver and beat it. New Games for Old.

Whether the progressivists in English cricket, who have so far annihilated venerable tradition as to cause the new season to open with two-day instead of three-day county matches, will prove triumphant in the end, remains to be seen. They declare the game had become dull; that public support was waning; that some "hustling" was needed. They maintain that the movements of the game were too slow and that if, among other examples, the outgoing batsman's disconsolate saunter to the far-distant pavilion and the incoming batsman's confident stroll from pavilion to pitch were modified by way of a little "speeding up," then the game would become more interesting to the spectators, and two days would become ample for a county match. But there are arguments on both sides. The assertions of the revolutionaries are met with stout denial by many prominent supporters of the game who are not prepared to admit that the two-day match or the element of hustle were necessary to the prosperity of the game. They are firmly convinced, moreover, that such changes as have come into operation for this experimental season may make an interesting fixture, but that that fixture is not the grand old institution, the county match.

Dickens' Office Boy.

The perseverance with which the universal memory lingers in memory is illustrated by the sum total of what the veteran porter who lately retired from his post at Temple Gate, London, can now recall about Charles Dickens. Back in the sixties this man, it is said, was office boy for the author, then editing All the Year Round. All he remembers is that Dickens wore a "black velvet coat with big smoked-pearl buttons, and a queer waistcoat, and trousers of shepherd's plaid, the biggest check you ever saw, and a great big deerstalker hat, as they called them, and his hair all hanging down, wiry like. Also that once upon a time somebody asked him, "Is that a showman?" And he answered, "That's the great Charles Dickens." A vivid picture, and this is probably why plain trousers and all, it still sticks in the former office boy's memory; but one wishes he could now recall some of the other things he must have observed in his remarkable chief.

LIFT OFF CORNS!
Apply few drops then lift sore, touchy corns off with fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little Freezone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. Yes, magic!
A tiny bottle of Freezone costs but a few cents at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.
Freezone is the sensational discovery of a Cincinnati genius. It is wonderful.

"CANADA'S GOLGOTHA."
Official German Protest Against Capt. Wood's Bas Relief.
The attention of the Canadian authorities has been directed to a report transmitted through wireless stations of the German Government of an interview given out by the Under-Secretary of State of the German Foreign Office complaining of the exhibition of a bas-relief by Capt. Derwent Wood, A.R.A., and entitled "Canada's Golgotha," in a recent ex' bition of Canadian war painting and sculpture at Burlington House, says the London Morning Post.
The bas-relief in question represented part of a barn in ruins, with a Canadian soldier crucified to the framework or door.
As the interview mentioned above claims that the Canadian Government has lent official sanction to what is termed in the interview an "invented outrage," the Ministry of Overseas Military Forces of Canada has authorized the following statement to be published:—
The bas-relief in question was executed entirely on his own initiative and without any suggestion, so far as is known, from any Canadian source, by Capt. Derwent Wood, an Associate of the Royal Academy, who is not a Canadian citizen and does not hold a commission in the Canadian army.
Capt. Derwent Wood offered the bas-relief to the trustees of the Canadian War Memorials Fund, which is a voluntary organization supported by private subscription, and which are from time to time allotted the proceeds of the sale and exhibition of certain Canadian official photographs and paintings. The trustees of the above fund on their own responsibility purchased this bas-relief, and it is understood have expressed their intention to offer it and other works of art purchased by them as a gift to them to the Government of Canada under certain conditions.
This bas-relief was exhibited recently in London, together with other paintings and works of art, the property of the Canadian War Memorials Fund, at an exhibition arranged by the trustees of that fund, who used for that purpose the facilities of the Canadian War Records Office. The profits of this and of similar exhibitions became the property of the fund.
Although the Canadian Government has not as yet signified its intention of accepting the bas-relief for any national purpose, certain investigations have been made as to the truth of the incident it purports to portray, and a considerable amount of evidence has been and is being collected with regard to this question. Included in the evidence so far in the possession of the Canadian Government are sworn statements by soldiers of the best character serving both with the Canadian and Imperial forces who were unknown to one another and between whom there was no possibility of collusion, the effect of which is identical, viz., that on or about April 22, 1915, in passing along a road in the vicinity of St. Julien, in Belgium, they saw a soldier pinned to a barn door by means of bayonets through the hands and wrists, and that this soldier wore a uniform and identification badges which led them to the belief that he was a Canadian soldier.

Victimized Punch.
Punch, which deserves at least the D.S.O. for the conspicuous sanity of its humor during the war, is the innocent victim, in its issue of April 23, of thievery. The verses "A Germless Eden," beginning "The antiseptic baby and the prophylactic pup," which Punch prints as original, were written by Arthur Guiterman, and first appeared in the Week-End Book Companion for July, 1906. They appear also in Mr. Guiterman's book, "The Laughing Muse," published by Harper's in 1915. These, for some reason, are the stoutest verses we know of. They were offered to Punch in 1908 by A. Frances Walker, and their publication was stopped because some one happened to remember that they were not Mr. Walker's. Mrs. Walker sold them, in May, 1908, to the New York World. This Rafter of Righteousness exposed the theft, but Mr. Walker told Mr. Pulitzer that he had written the verses, before July, 1906, for a newspaper in Sydney or Melbourne. The editor of this paper, in response to a cable from Mr. Pulitzer, said this was untrue. We wonder who the thief was who sold it to Punch.—New York Tribune.

German Samoan Islands In South Pacific Ocean Are Small But Interesting

THE German Samoan Islands, for which New Zealand is to hold the mandate, according to preliminary summaries of the peace treaty, are interesting.
Samoa, called by former geographers the Navigators Islands, from the skill in navigation shown by its inhabitants, consists of four principal bits of land lying in the South Pacific, nearly midway between New Zealand and Hawaii.
The number of islands in the group may be counting the smaller, be increased to 11, or even 14, but only Savii, Upolu, Tutuila, and the three usually included under the general term Manua, are important.
All are verdure-clad and inhabited, and in appearance and shape resemble immense green hats, the interior corresponding to the crown being mountainous, while the brim or shore is covered with cocoanut palms, breadfruit, banana, and other tropical trees, which furnish the native food.
At some prehistoric period the peaks of a submerged mountain chain running northeast and southwest have been lifted from the depths of the ocean by the upheaval of volcanoes now long extinct. Accumulations of soil brought by heavy rains from the mountains meet the evergrowing reef, which prevents easy approach to the land except in those places where fresh water streams, forcing their way through, form openings in the coral barrier.
Between reef and shore a lagoon, varying in width from 200 yards to two or three miles, provides a secure highway for coast and inter-island traffic. The entire length of the group, if Rose Island be included, is little less than 300 miles.
The native inhabitants of the islands are of Polynesian stock and are clearly related to the natives of both Hawaii and New Zealand. For practical purposes these natives may be divided into four classes. At the head stand the chiefs, who are hereditary in the sense that they must belong to certain families, but elective in that they exercise authority by virtue of titles conferred on them.
The Tulafale, talking-man, is their executive officer, who phrases their thoughts in eloquent language, and is frequently the central figure in the district and the source of authority. Below him and above the lowest class, composed of what are known as the "common people," are the native teachers and catechists, who wear more clothes and do less fighting than the rest of the population.
There is nothing in the dress or bearing of a high chief which enabled a foreigner to distinguish him, but he is isolated from the rest of the people by a system of rigid etiquette. No one may hold up umbrella or do certain kinds of work in his presence, and a special vocabulary is set apart in which to address him. The common name for food, an ax, a pig, etc., are tabooed in his presence. His face, his anger, and other attributes are described in a entirely different way from those used for ordinary men.
Hedged about as he is, the chief, in his intercourse with persons not of his rank, has come to depend largely on his "talking man" who, like his chief, is ceied from certain families in which the office is hereditary. As a rule, no one is elected who has not a gift for oratory, which is a common talent in Samoa.
The powers and duties of the "talking men" are considerable. They are men of much dignity of carriage, and as they stand leaning upon a staff of office with a "fue," or fly-flap cast over one shoulder, with which occasionally to emphasize their remarks, they compare favorably in appearance with the orators of a nation more civilized than themselves.

Soldiers to Emigrate.
Everything tends to show, says the London Chronicle, that when the boys get home many of them will not stay there. The war has bred in many love for an open air vigorous life, and hundreds of soldiers awaiting demobilization do not regard a return to the desk or the office with enthusiasm. A very large number are out from emigration, hoping to find a fuller, freer life, with perhaps a spice of adventure, in lands across the seas.
Miss Cheshire, who is in charge of the employment agency run by the Overseas Club in Aldwych, said that they are being overwhelmed with inquiries from young soldiers who are anxious to try their luck in the colonies or South America. "There are queues of them from morning to night," she said.
Most of them are young fellows who joined the army straight from school, and they want to strike out a new line, in a new land. Without having any definite aim they all seem to think there is a bigger life waiting for them in the colonies; and as they all possess the spirit of adventure they are keen to try new conditions.
"We are able to help them a good bit," said Miss Cheshire. "We have 11,000 corresponding secretaries scattered all over the world, and they are able to supply us with very complete information as to labor conditions and business openings. In many cases we feel justified in advising inquirers to go out and try their luck, particularly if they have a little capital. And we are able to tell them which places need a lot of capital and which do not."

Making Trips Across Atlantic

SINCE that day, August 3, 1492, on which the great Christopher, with his three little ships, the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria, ventured forth from Palos into the "Sea of Darkness" on the voyage which was to end in the discovery of the New World, navigators have been striving to shorten the time of getting across. It took the admiral himself considerably more than two months to make the passage, and great reason that he was, he shortened it all he could. Some hundred and thirty years later, the Mayflower did not greatly improve on this time, but as the years went by, and the lanes became better known, and the demand for speed increased, the shipbuilder built his ships more and more for speed, until, in the days of the third George, the transports could make their way across, with a fair wind, inside of a month. So matters stood at the time of that great revolution in the way of the sea, the introduction of steam.
It was not a complete revolution, of course, for not only did the sailing ship valiantly hold her own, even in the matter of speed, for the first few years, but such famous clippers as the Dreadnought and the Red Jacket rivaled, in their day, the fastest steamer afloat. Built for speed, with an almost unbelievable spread of canvas, they could and did make the voyage between New York and Liverpool in little over thirteen days. Indeed, in the early days, the steamer never ventured to sea in its own strength alone. Steam engines it had, and the best that could be devised, but it was always a full-rigged ship as well. Thus the Savannah, which is generally recorded as the first steamship to cross the Atlantic, used her engines for only five days out of the twenty-five occupied in the voyage. That was in 1819, and it was not until fourteen years later that a steamship, the Royal William, crossed the Atlantic entirely under her own steam. She sailed from Quebec and reached London in seventeen days. Curiously enough, although this is a well-established fact, and a full account of the proceedings is to be found in the Parliamentary Library at Ottawa, the place of honor as the first vessel to cross the Atlantic under her own steam is frequently given to the Sirius. To be sure, the Sirius had a much better press at the time than the Royal William. Even in those days the inspired paragraph was not utterly unknown. And so in the London Times eighty-one years ago there appeared, one day, a kind of advance notice telling of how "the experiment of steam voyage from England to America" had commenced; and how, a few days before, the St. George Steam Packet Co.'s powerful steamship Sirius, Lieut. Roberts, R.N., commander, had sailed off East Lane stairs en route for Cork and New York. "The Sirius," the paragraph continued, "is a vessel of 700 tons, with engines of 320 horsepower; and has been fitted up in a most splendid manner. It is expected that she will complete the voyage in fifteen days, and so confident are the owners of this that they have already announced her setting out from New York for the return voyage on the 1st of May. She carries only a limited number of first-class passengers, but this number will be considerably augmented at Cork. She does not take out any goods, being intended for a passenger ship only."
As a matter of fact, the good ship actually sailed from Cork with a complement of only six first-class passengers. All the others were rendered so doubtful as to the expediency of prosecuting the adventure further, by their experiences during the storm in the English Channel, that they forfeited their passage money and decided to trust to the winds. The Sirius, however, duly arrived in the Hudson, although not without adventure. In spite of the fact that she carried 450 tons of coal, a great quantity in those days, being loaded down almost to the water's edge, she ran so short of fuel before she sighted Sandy Hook that she had to burn every spare yard and spar, and even rosin, of which she carried a considerable quantity. But she reached New York, under her own steam, and set out on her return voyage, as per schedule, on May 1. The attempts and achievements of these early pioneers were, of course, the one great subject of conversation and debate on both sides of the Atlantic. And so history, today, is but repeating itself, only, today, days have become hours. Indeed, the passage of the Atlantic, during the 400 years or so that men have been making it, has been steadily changing, as far as the method of crossing is concerned, from months to weeks, from weeks to days, and now to hours.

His Recommendation.
"Have you any one in court who will vouch for your good character?" asked the magistrate of a man charged with petty offence. "Yes, sir," said the defendant; "there is the head constable." The head constable was amazed. "Why, your worship, I don't even know the man," he protested. "Now, sir," broke in the culprit, "I have lived in the town for twenty years and if the head constable don't know me yet, isn't that a character for you?"

An Englishman and Archangel

IT is a curious fact that Archangel owes its origin to an Englishman. It was in the days of Spanish greatness, when the galleons of the King of Spain claimed to rule the sea after a truly Spanish fashion, and the strangely elastic law of reprisals made voyaging for all merchantmen in certain waters a very uncertain experience. For several years there had been talk in England, especially at the English court, of the possibility of the existence of a northeast passage to India, and of the desirability of exploring it. Such a passage, if it existed, would undoubtedly be safe from Spanish depredations, and there were, moreover, great possibilities of opening up in this way a new field for British trade. The talk, however, was all there was to the matter, until about the time of the reign of the boy King, Edward VI. About that time, however, the famous navigator Sebastian Cabot took up the question in earnest, and, in May of the year 1553, there set out from Deptford an expedition of three ships, under the command of Sir Hugh Willoughby, bound for the northern seas. One of these ships was the Bonaventure, of which Richard Chancellor was the "captain and pilot-general," and it is round this ship and its doughty captain and pilot-general that all the interest of the story centres. He did not discover the northeast passage, but he did "discover" Russia, and, after many surprising adventures, returned to London with a letter from the Tzar "establishing trade relations between the two nations."
But let the story be told more in detail. In a storm off the north coast of Norway, the ships became separated. Chancellor, however, succeeded in reaching Vardohus, the meeting place that had been agreed upon in case the ships were unable to keep together, and there he waited for the rest of the company. The other two ships never appeared, and after waiting seven days Chancellor weighed anchor and again set sail east. It was all unknown land and sea now, and so, hugging the shore all the time, he skirted the coast of the Kola peninsula, and, at last, coming to the narrow mouth of the White Sea, turned in. Then following, though he did not know it, the route of the old Norseman, he cast anchor ultimately in the "pleasant haven" at the mouth of the Dvina, close to where Archangel stands to-day.
Now, it is a long way from Archangel to Moscow, over 600 miles at least, as the crow flies, and longer as the road would travel over the frozen lowlands. But, with that astonishing rapidity with which news sometimes travelled before the arrival of the telegraph, word was quickly brought to Ivan the Terrible, at Moscow, of the English navigator's arrival. Ivan was much interested, and at once despatched an envoy to bid him welcome and to convey a courteous invitation to him to come to the capital. Chancellor at once accepted, made the long and unpleasant journey, found great favor with Ivan, secured his trade treaty, returned to his ship in the White Sea, and sailed once again for England. Even then his adventures were not at an end, for, before he actually reached his desired haven on the English coast, his ship was attacked and plundered by Flemings. However, whatever else he lost, he did not lose his priceless treaty, and the outcome of it all was the granting of a charter to the Association of Merchant Adventurers, also known as the Muscovy Company. That was in the year 1555. Soon afterwards an English factory was erected on the lower Dvina, and in 1584 a fort was built round which there gradually grew up the town and port of Archangel.

War Souvenirs.
A month ago a Canadian soldier in France cabled his father and mother in Toronto that he was returning home immediately with a Belgian girl. His father and mother, very prominent in the social life of Toronto, were somewhat embarassed by the cablegram, for they thought their son of twenty-three, who had been three years at the front, had without notifying them married outside their social circle.
This particular Canadian soldier arrived home the other day, and with him was a Belgian girl four years old. His father and mother were much relieved when he told them how he was walking through the streets of Brussels one day and the little girl ran and caught hold of his hand and said to him, "I want you to take me home." He could not resist the child's request, and Canada is the richer by one little Belgian girl four years old, and she is richer by a foster father and mother to take the place of those she lost during the war.
A returned member of the Canadian Aviation Corps has a little French boy, whom he adopted under the laws of France, because the little chap was an orphan and had only his grandmother, dying of an incurable disease, to take care of him. The little nine-year-old French boy will grow up to be a worthy citizen of Canada.

Long Live The King

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

"What I want to know is this," said Bobby, swinging his legs on the table: "What are the terrorists?"

Pepy dropped her knitting, and stared with open mouth. "What know you of such things?" she demanded.

"Well, terrorists killed the crown prince's father, and—"

Quite suddenly Pepy leaped from her chair, and covered Bobby's mouth with her hand. "Hush!" she said, and stared about her with frightened eyes. Then, in a whisper: "They are everywhere. No one knows who they are, nor where they meet. I myself," she went on impressively, "crossing the place one night late, after spending the evening with a friend, saw a line of cats moving in the shadows. One of them stopped and looked at me." Pepy crossed herself. "It had a face like the Comtesse de Thebes."

Bobby stared with interest through the doorway. The governess did look like a cat. "Maybe she's one of them," he reflected aloud.

"Oh, for God's sake, hush!" cried Pepy, and fell to knitting rapidly. Nor could Bobby elicit anything further from her. But that night, in his sleep, he saw a crown prince, dressed in velvet and ermine, being surrounded and attacked by an army of cats, and went, shivering, to crawl into his mother's bed.

CHAPTER X.

The Committee of Ten.

On the evening of the annual day of mourning, the party returned from the fortress. The archduchess slept. The crown prince talked, mostly to Hedwig, and even she said little. After a time the silence affected the boys' high spirits. He leaned back in his chair on the deck of the launch, and watched the flying landscape.

It was almost dark when the launch arrived at the quay. The red carpet was still there, and another crowd. Had Prince Ferdinand William Otto been less taken up with finding one of his kid gloves, which he had lost, he would have noticed that there was a sentry going on at the very edge of the red carpet, and that the beggar of the morning was being led away, between two policemen, while a third, running up the river bank, gingerly deposited a small round object in the water, and stood back. It was merely one of the small incidents of a royal outing, and was never published in the papers. But Father Gregory, whose old eyes were far sighted, had seen it all. His hand—the hand of the church—was on the shoulder of the crown prince as they landed.

The boy looked around for the little girl of the bouquet. He took an immense interest in little girls, partly because he seldom saw any. But she was gone.

When the motor which had taken them from the quay reached the palace, Hedwig roused the archduchess, whose head had dropped forward on her chest. "Here we are, mother," she said. "You have had a nice sleep."

But Annuncista muttered something about being glad the wretched day was over, and every one save Prince Ferdinand William Otto seemed glad to get back. The boy was depressed. He felt, somehow, that they should have enjoyed it, and that, having merely endured it, they had failed him again.

The countess, having left her royal mistress in the hands of her maids, went to her own apartment. She was not surprised, on looking into her mirror, to find herself haggard and worn. It had been a terrible day. Only a second had separated that gaping lens in her bag from the eyes of the officers about. Never, in an adventurous life, had she felt so near to death. Even now its cold breath chilled her.

However, that was over, well over. She had done well, too. A dozen pictures of the fortress, of its guns, of even its mine chart as it hung on a wall, were in the bag. Its secrets, so securely held, were hers, and would be Karl's.

It was a cunningly devised scheme. Two bags, exactly alike as to appearance, had been made. One, which she carried daily, was what it appeared to be. The other contained a camera, tiny but accurate, with a fine lens. When a knob of the fastening was pressed, the watch slid aside and the shutter snapped. The pictures when enlarged had proved themselves perfect.

Pleading fatigue, she dismissed her maid and locked the doors. Then she opened the sliding panel, and unfastened the safe. The roll of film was in her hand, ready to be deposited under the false bottom of her jewel case.

Within the security of her room, the countess felt at ease. She even sang a little, a bit of a ballad from her native mountains.

Still singing, she carried the jewel case to her table, and sat down before it. Then she put a hand to her throat.

The lock had been forced.

A glance about showed her that her code book was gone. In the tray above, her jewels remained untouched; her pearl collar, the diamond knickknacks the archduchess had given her on successive Christmases, even a handful of gold coins, all were safe enough. But the code book was gone.

Then indeed did the countess look death in the face—and found it terrible. For a moment she could not so much as stand without support. It was then that she saw a paper folded under her jewels and took it out with shaking fingers. In fine, copperplate script she read:

Madame—Tonight at one o'clock a closed fiacre will await you in the Street of the Wise Virgins, near the cnurch. You will go in it, without fail, to wherever it takes you.

(Signed) The Committee of Ten.

The committee of ten! This thing had happened to her. Then it was not the hair that mythical committee of ten existed, that this terror of Livonia was a real terror, which had her by the throat. For there was no escape. None. Now indeed she knew that rumor spoke the truth, and that the terrorists were everywhere. In daylight they had entered her room. They had known of the safe, knows of the code. Known how much else?

Wild ideas of flight crossed her mind, to be as instantly abandoned for their futility. Where could she go that they would not follow her? When she had reacted from her first shock she fell to pondering the matter, pro and con. What could they want of her? If she was an enemy to the country, so were they. But even that led nowhere, for after all, the terrorists were not enemies to Livonia. They claimed indeed to be its friends, to hold in their hands its future and its betterment. Enemies of the royal house they were, of course.

She was nearly distracted by that time. She was a brave woman, physically and mentally of hard fiber, but the very name signed to the paper set her nerves to twitching. It was the committee of ten which had murdered Prince Hubert and his young wife; the committee of ten which had exploded a bomb in the very palace itself, and killed old Breidau, of the king's council; the committee of ten which had turned the government house, and had led the mob in the student riots a year or so before.

In this dread presence, then, she would find herself that night. For she would go. There was no way out.

The countess rang for her maid. She was cool enough now, and white, with a cruel line about her mouth that Minna knew well. She went to the door into the corridor, and locked it.

Then she turned on the maid. "I am ready for you, now."

"Madame will retire?"

"You little fool! You know what I am ready for."

The maid stood still. Her wide, bovine eyes, filled with alarm, watched the countess as she moved swiftly across the room to her wardrobe. When she turned again, she held in her hand a thin black riding crop. Minna's ruddy color faded. She knew the Loschska, knew their furies.

"Madame!" she cried, and fell on her knees. "What have I done? Oh, what have I done?"

"That is what you will tell me," said the countess, and brought down the crop. A livid streak across the girl's face turned slowly to red.

"I have done nothing, I swear it, Mother of pity, help me! I have done nothing."

The crop descended again, this time on one of the great sleeves of her peasant costume. So thin it was, so brutal the blow, that it cut into the muslin. Groaning, the girl fell forward on her face. The countess continued to strike pitiless blows into which she put all her fury, her terror, her frayed and ragged nerves.

The girl on the floor, from whimpering, fell to crying hard, with great noiseless sobs of pain and bewilderment. When at last the blows ceased, she lay still.

The countess prodded her with her foot. "Get up," she commanded.

But she was startled when she saw the girl's face. It was she who was the fool. The welt would tell its own story, and the other servants would talk. It was already a deep purple, and swollen. Both women were trembling. The countess, still holding the crop, sat down.

"Now!" she said. "You will tell me to whom you gave a certain small book of which you know."

"I, madame?"

"You."

"But what book? I have given nothing, madame. I swear it."

"Then you admitted some one to this room?"

"No one, madame, except—" She hesitated.

"Well?"

"There came this afternoon the men who clean madame's windows. No one else, madame."

She put her hand to her cheek, and looked furtively to see if her fingers were stained with blood. The countess, muttering, fell to furious pacing of the room. So that was it, of course. The girl was telling the truth. She was too stupid to lie. Then the committee of ten indeed knew everything—had known that she would be away had known of the window cleaners, had known of the safe, and her possession of the code.

She dismissed the girl and put away the riding crop, then she smoothed the disorder of her hair and dress, and, court physician, calling a half hour later, found her reading on a chaise longue in her boudoir, looking pale and handsome, and spent what he considered a pleasant half hour with her.

Then at last he was gone, and she went about her heavy-hearted preparations for the night. From a corner of her wardrobe she drew a long peasant's cape, such a cape as Minna might wear. Over her head, instead of a hat, she threw a gray veil. A careless disguise, but all that was obtainable now something infinitely valuable and incriminating—the roll of film. She glanced about, and seeing a silver vase of roses, hurriedly emptied the water out, wrapped the film in folled paper, and dropped it down among the stems.

The Street of the Wise Virgins was not near the palace. Even by walking briskly she was in danger of being late. The wind kept her back, too. Then, at last, the Street of the Wise Virgins and the fiacre, standing at the curb, with a driver wrapped in rugs against the cold of the February night, and his hat pulled down over his eyes. The countess stopped beside him.

"You are expecting a passenger?"

"Yes, madame."

With her hand on the door, the countess realized that the fiacre was already occupied. As she peered into its darkened interior, the shadow regathered itself into a cloaked and masked figure. She shrank back.

"Enter, madame," said a voice.

The figure appalled her. It was not sufficient to know that behind the horrifying mask which covered the entire face and head, there was a human figure, human pulses that beat, human eyes that appraised her. She hesitated.

"Quickly," said the voice.

She got in, shrinking into a corner of the carriage. Her lips were dry, the roaring of terror was in her ears. The door closed.

Then commenced a drive of which afterward the countess dared not think. The figure neither moved nor spoke. Inside the carriage reigned the most complete silence. Then the carriage stopped, at last the shrouded figure moved and spoke.

"I regret, countess, that my orders are to blindfold you."

She submitted ungracefully, while he bound a black cloth over her eyes. He drew it very close and knotted it behind. In the act his fingers touched her face, and she felt them cold and clammy. The contact sickened her.

"Your hand, madame."

She was led out of the carriage, and across soft earth, a devious course again, as though they avoided small obstacles. Once her foot touched something low and hard, like marble. Again, in the darkness, they stumbled over a mound. She knew where she was, then—in a graveyard. But which? There were many about the city.

An open space, the opening of a gate or door that squeaked softly, a flight of steps that led downward, and a breath of musty, cold air, damp and cellarlike.

At last, still in unbroken silence, she knew that they had entered a large space. Their footsteps no longer echoed and reechoed. Her guide walked more slowly, and at last paused, releasing her hand. She felt again the touch of his clammy fingers as he untied the knots of her bandages. He took it off.

At first she could see little. When her eyes grew accustomed, she made out the scene slowly.

A great stone vault, its walls broken into crypts which had contained caskets of the dead. But the caskets had been removed, and were piled in a corner, and in their place were rifles. In the center was a pine table, curiously incongruous, and on it writing materials, a cheap clock, and a pile of documents. There were two candles only, and these not lighted. In skulls—old brown skulls so infinitely removed from all semblance to the human that they were not even horrible. It was if they had been used, not to inspire terror, but because they were at hand and convenient for the purpose. In the shadow, ranged in a semicircle, were nine figures, all motionless, all cloaked and masked in black. They sat, another incongruity, on plain wooden chairs. But in spite of that they were figures of dread. The one who had brought her made the tenth.

Had she not known the past record of the men before her, the rather opera bouffe setting with which they chose to surround themselves might have aroused her scorn. But Olga Loschek knew too much. She guessed shrewdly that, with the class of men with whom they dealt, it was not enough that their name spelled terror. They must visualize it. They had taken their cue from that very church, indeed, beneath which they hid. The church, with its shrines and images, appealed to the eye. They, too, appealed to the eye. Their masks, the carefully constructed and upheld mystery of their identity, the trappings of death about them—it was skillfully done.

Still no one spoke. The countess faced them. Only her eyes showed her nervousness; she stood haughtily, her head held high. But like most women, she could not endure silence for long, at least the silence of shrouded figures and intent eyes.

"Now that I am here," she demanded, "may I ask why I have been summoned?"

It was Number Seven who replied. It was Number Seven who, during the hour that followed, spoke for the others. None moved, or but slightly. Evidently all had been carefully prearranged.

"Look on the table, countess. You will find there some papers you will perhaps recognize."

She took a step toward the table and glanced down. The code book lay there. Also the letter she had sent by Peter Niburg. She made no effort to disclaim them.

"I recognize them," she said clearly.

"Do you realize what will happen, madame, if these papers are turned over to the authorities?"

She shrugged her shoulders. And now Number Seven rose, a tall figure of mystery, and spoke at length in a cultured, softly intoned voice. The countess, listening, felt the voice vaguely familiar, as were the burning eyes behind the mask.

"It is our hope, madame," he said, "that you will make it unnecessary for the committee of ten to use those papers. We have no quarrel with women. We wish rather a friend than an enemy. The committee of ten, to those who know its motives, has the highest and most loyal of ideals—to the country."

His voice took on a new, almost a fanatic note. They had watched the gradual decay of the country, he said. Its burden of taxation grew greater each year. The masses sweated and toiled, to carry on their backs the dead weight of the aristocracy and the court. The iron hand of the chancellor held everything; an old king who would die, was dying now, and after that a boy, nominal ruler only, while the chancellor continued his hard rule. And now, as if that were not enough, there was talk of an alliance with Karnia, an alliance which, carried through, would destroy the hope of a republic.

The countess stared.

"The price of the alliance, madame, is the Princess Hedwig in marriage. The committee, which knows all things, believes that you have reason to dislike this marriage."

Save that she clutched her cloak more closely, the countess made no move. But there was a soft stir among the figures. Perhaps, after all, the committee as a whole did not know all things.

"To prevent this alliance, madame, is our first aim. There are others to follow. But"—he bent forward—"the first is the most pressing. It is our hope that that marriage will not occur before his death."

By this time Olga Loschek knew very well where she stood. The committee was propitiatory. She was not in danger, save as it might develop. They were, in a measure, putting their case.

"If Karl has broken faith before. He will not support Hedwig until he has received his price. He is determined on the marriage."

"A message of expediency," said the countess impatiently.

The speaker for the opposition shrugged his shoulders. "Perhaps," he replied, "although there are those of us who think that if this matter is expedited, Karl gets more than he receives.

"The matter lies thus, madame. The chancellor is now in Karnia. Doubtless he will return with the agreement signed. We shall learn that in a day or so. We do not approve of this alliance for various reasons, and we intend to take steps to prevent it. The paper itself is nothing. But plainly, countess, we need a friend in the palace, one who is in the confidence of the royal family."

"And for such friendship, I am to secure safety?"

"Yes, madame. But that is not all. Let me tell you briefly how things stand with us. We have, supporting us, certain bodies, workingmen's guilds, a part of the student body, not so much of the army as we would wish. Dissatisfied folk, madame, who would exchange the emblem of tyranny for freedom. On the announcement of the king's death, in every part of the kingdom will go up the cry of liberty. But the movement must start here. The city must rise against the throne. And against that there are two obstacles." He paused. The clock ticked, and water dripped into the basin with metallic splashes. "The first is this marriage. The second—is the Crown Prince Ferdinand William Otto."

The countess recoiled. "No!"

"A moment, madame. You think badly of us." Under his mask the countess divined a cold smile. "It is not necessary to contemplate violence. There are other methods. The boy could be taken over the border, or hidden until the republic is firmly established. After that, he is unimportant."

The countess, still pale, looked at him scornfully. "You do my intelligence small honor."

"Where peaceful methods will avail, our methods are peaceful, madame."

"It was, then, in peace that you murdered Prince Hubert?"

"The errors of the past are past." Then, with a new sternness: "Make no mistake. Whether through your agency or another, countess, when the cathedral bell tosses the news of the king's death, and the people wait in the place for their new king to come out on the balcony, he will not come."

The countess was not entirely baffled. Standing swaying and white-faced before the tribunal, she saw suddenly the golden head of the little crown prince, saw him smiling as he had smiled that day in the sunlight, saw him troubled and forlorn as he had been when, that very evening, he had left them to go to his lonely rooms. Perhaps she reached the biggest moment of her life then, when she folded her arms and stared proudly at the shrouded figures before her.

"I will not do it," she said.

But Number Seven seemed impassive. "A new idea, countess!" he said suavely. "I can understand that your heart recoils. But this thing is inevitable, as I have said. Whether you or another—and perhaps with fine to think you may come to another conclusion. We make no threats. Our position is, however, one of responsibility. We are compelled to place the power of the republic before every other consideration."

"That is a threat."

"We remember both our friends and our enemies, madame. And we have many friends and enemies. There is no middle course. If you would like time to think it over—"

"How much time?" She clutched at the words.

"Even vary," said Number Seven mockingly. "Some determine quickly. Others—"

"May I have a month?"

"Ample which the king may die! Alas, madame, it is now you who do us too little honor!"

"A week?" begged the countess desperately.

The leader glanced along the line. One head after another nodded slowly.

"A week it is, madame. Comrade Five!"

The one who had brought her came forward with the bandage.

"At the end of one week, madame, a fiacre will, as tonight, be waiting in the Street of the Wise Virgins."

"And these papers?"

"On the day the republic of Livonia is established, madame, they will be returned to you."

She bowed, and returned to his chair. Save for the movements of the man who placed the bandage over her eyes, there was absolute silence in the room.

* * * * * * *

Prince Ferdinand William Otto was supremely happy. Three quite delightful things had happened. First, Nikky had returned. He said he felt perfectly well, but the crown prince thought he looked as though he had been ill, and glanced frequently at Nikky's exercise during the riding hour. Second, Hedwig did not come to the riding lesson, and he had Nikky to himself. Third, he, Prince Ferdinand William Otto, was on the eve of a birthday.

This last, however, was not unmixed happiness. For the one day the sentence of exile was to be removed so that he might lunch with the king. And he was to have strawberry jam with his tea, some that Miss Braithe, waite's sister had sent from England. But to offset all this, he was to receive a decoration.

Hedwig was not at the riding school that morning. This relieved Prince Ferdinand William Otto, whose views as to Nikky were entirely settled. He had Nikky himself had unaccountably lost his high spirit of the morning. He played, of course, as he always did. And even taught the crown prince how to hang over the edge of his saddle, while his horse was cantering, so that bullets would not strike him.

They rode and frolicked, yelled a bit, put two ponies and whacked a polo ball over the tan bark, until the crown prince was sweating royally and was gloriously flushed.

"I don't know when I have been so happy," he said, dragging out his handkerchief and mopping his face. "It's a great deal pleasanter without Hedwig, isn't it?"

While they played, overhead the great hearse was ready at last. Its woodwork shone. Its gold crosses gleamed. No flack of dust disturbed its austere magnificence.

The man and the boy who had been working on it stood back and surveyed it.

"All ready," said the man, leaning on the handle of his long brush. "Now it may happen any time."

"It is very handsome. But I am glad I am not the old king." The boy picked up pails and brushes. "Nothing to look forward to but—that."

"But much to look back on," the man observed grimly, "and little that is good."

The boy glanced through a window, below which the riding ring stretched its brown surface, scarred by nervous hoofs. "I would change places with the crown prince," he said enviously. "Listen to him! Always laughing. Never to labor, nor worry, nor think of the next day's food—"

"Young fool!" The man came to his shoulder and glanced down also. "Would like to be a princeling, then! No worry. No trouble. Always play, play!" He gripped the boy's shoulder. "Look, lad, at the windows about. That is where I live, to be a prince. Wherever you look, what do you see? Stablemen? Grooms? Bah, secret agents, watching that no assassin, such perhaps as you and I, lurk about."

He stopped and stared, wiping the glass clear that he might see better. Nikky without his cap, disheveled and flushed with exertion, was making a frantic dash at the white ball, rolling past him. Where had he seen such a head, such a flying mop of hair? Ah! He remembered. It was the flying young devil who had attacked him and the others that night in the by-street, when Peter Niburg lay stunned!

Miss Braithwaite had a bad headache that afternoon, and the crown prince drove out with his aunt. The Archduchess Annunciata went shopping. The crown prince sat in the carriage and watched the people. The man beside the coachman sat with alert eyes, and there were others who scanned the crowd intently. But it was a quiet, almost an adoring crowd, and there was even a dog, to Prince Ferdinand William Otto's huge delight.

The man who owned the dog, seeing the child's eyes on him, put him through his tricks. Truly a wonderful dog, that would catch things on his nose and lie dead, rousing only to a whistle which its owner called Gabriel's trumpet.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto, growing excited, leaned quite out of the window. "What is your dog's name?" he inquired, in his clear treble.

The man took off his hat and bowed. "Toto, highness. He is of French origin."

"He is a very nice dog. I have always wanted a dog like that. He must be a great friend."

"A great friend, highness." He would have expatiated on the dog, but he was uncertain of the etiquette of the procedure. His face beamed with pleasure, however. Then a splendid impulse came to him. This dog, his boon companion, he would present to the crown prince. It was all he had, and he would give it, freely, even though it left him friendless.

But here again he was at a loss. Was it the proper thing? Did one do such things in this fashion, or was there a procedure? He cocked an eye at the box of the carriage, but the two men sat impressive, immobile.

Finally he made up his mind. Hat in hand, he stepped forward. "Highness," he said nervously, "since the dog pleases you, I—I would present him to you."

"To me?" The crown prince's voice was full of incredulous joy.

"Yes, highness. If such a thing be permissible."

"Are you sure you don't mind?"

"He is the best I have, highness. I wish to offer my best."

Prince Ferdinand William Otto almost choked with excitement. "I have always wanted one," he cried. "If you are certain you can spare him, I'll be very good to him. No one," he said, "ever gave me a dog before. I'd like to have him now, if I may."

The crowd was growing. It pressed closer, pleased at the boy's delight. Truly they were anticipating in great things. A small cheer and many smiles followed the lifting of the dog through the open window of the carriage. And the dog was surely a dog to be proud of. Already it shook hands with the crown prince.

Perhaps, in that motley gathering, there were some who viewed the scene with hostile eyes, some who saw, not a child glowing with delight over a gift, but one of the hated ruling family, a barrier, an obstacle in the way of freedom. But if such there were, they were few. It was, indeed, as the terrorists feared. The city loved the boy.

Annunciata, followed by an irritated Hilda, came out of the shop. Hilda's wardrobe had been purchased, and was not to her taste.

How to Grow Plants for Winter From Cuttings.

August Ploughing Destroys a Considerable Proportion of White Grubs and Wire Worms Infesting Old Sod Fields—Flax Is a Splendid Crop for a First Crop on Such Fields.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

TOWARD the end of the summer, the amateur flower grower often wonders how the stock of geraniums in the flower border can be increased and preserved by some other means than by taking up the old plants in the autumn; the last named method not having, perhaps, proved successful in past seasons. By starting fairly early, toward the end of August, before cool chilly nights appear, a nice supply of young plants, more especially of all kinds of geraniums of the flowering kind, or those having fragrant leaves, or even the bronze or silver-leaved kinds, can be had by starting cuttings or slips of these plants. First of all obtain a shallow box about three inches deep, ten or twelve inches wide, and from twelve to twenty-four inches in length, an empty haddie (fish) box will do very well. It should have some small holes bored through the bottom for drainage. Pack this box firmly with moist, clean, gritty sand; sand that will make good stone mortar will do. Then take the terminal or top part of the young growth of plants about four or five inches in length, each shoot or cutting having from four to six joints where leaves are produced. Make the base of the cutting just below one of these nodes or leaf joints, making a clean cut with a sharp knife flat across. Cut off some of the lower leaves, leaving two or three leaves at the top. Cut off all bloom buds and blossoms where possible. Make a hole or drill in the wet sand deep enough to set fully half the length of stems of cuttings in the sand. Water them well once and keep the sand moist until cuttings are rooted, which should be in five or six weeks' time. The box can be set out of doors in partial shade until the first week in September, when they can be taken into the window. When cuttings have roots about an inch in length dig them carefully from the sand without injuring the roots and pot them singly into small 2½ inch pots or set them about two inches apart in well-drained shallow boxes in a soil made up of one part sand, one part leaf mould, and about six parts of light loamy soil enriched with one part of dry pulverized cow manure from the pasture field. This last is one of the best possible fertilizers for soil for pot plants. Set the young plants in the window in a temperature of 60 to 70 deg. Fahr., an ordinary house temperature. — William Hunt, O. A. College, Guelph.

White Grubs and Wireworms.

White grubs are the larvae of the large dark brown May beetles, or "June Bugs," as they are commonly called, and, being underground feeders, are very difficult to control. A great variety of experiments have been made with chemicals of many sorts, but none has proved successful. The only method of control is the adoption of a system of rotation of crops. No field should be left in grass for more than three years. An old pasture, when broken up, is often found to be full of these grubs, and they will attack the roots of any plants that are sown in place of their ordinary food which has been removed. Corn and potatoes will suffer severely, but clover is least affected by them and may be seeded down with rye. After the second year any crop will usually be safe. Deep ploughing in October before the weather becomes cold will expose the grubs and destroy many. Pigs and poultry, crows and other birds and skunks greedily devour them. Where an old field is found to be badly infested, it is a good plan to turn in some hogs; they will soon root out and eat up all the grubs. If the field is large it would be well to confine them with hurdles to a small portion at a time, and when that is cleared move them on to a fresh feeding ground.

Wireworms are the larvae of Click beetles, so called from their curious habit of springing up in the air with a "click" when laid upon their backs. The beetles are long and narrow, rounded above, with very short legs, and usually dull gray or black in color. The grubs are long and round, with a very hard skin, from which they get their name of Wireworms, and yellow or whitish in color. Their life-history is very similar to that of the White Grubs, as they thrive in old pastures and take two or three years to mature. They feed upon the roots of any plants that may be grown where they are, and are especially injurious to corn and potatoes, in the latter of which they often burrow great holes. As in the case of the White Grubs, no treatment of the soil with poisons of any kind has been found effective. There is a prevalent idea that salt will kill them, but this is an entire mistake. The only remedy is a short rotation of crops as is the case of White Grubs. Ploughing in August and cross-ploughing in September will destroy great numbers. Clean cultivation, leaving no weeds or other shelter for the beetles, in fence corners and elsewhere is also of importance. Flax is a particularly valuable crop for sowing on old sod, as the worms injure it but very little.

Break up the old pastures is the advice all farmers should follow.—Dr. C. J. S. Bethune, O. A. College, Guelph.

Feeding the Chicks.

During the first few days the chicks should be fed very sparingly, as they contain within their bodies a supply of natural food which is sufficient to last them at least thirty-six hours, or until they are thoroughly dried off and have strength enough to run about in search of food. For this reason the small chicks should be fed with care until all this nourishment—the bulk of the egg—is thoroughly absorbed. If the chicks are overfed and the yolk is not properly absorbed, fermentation takes place, bacterial action is set up, and a great many of the chicks will die. The only external indication of this condition is a more or less pronounced diarrhoea of varying color but usually grayish white. A post-mortem examination will show the yolk sac to be nearly normal in size and filled with a watery yolk mass. In order to overcome this trouble and reduce the death rate during the early life of the chicks, one must study each lot and make such slight variations in the feed as may be necessary.

Field Bindweed In Mangel.

Mangel seed samples, containing seeds of Field Bindweed or Wild Morning Glory in considerable numbers, have recently been received at the Ottawa Seed Laboratory. Field Bindweed is probably the most persistent and objectionable of the weeds classed as noxious under the Seed Control Act. Fortunately it is not widespread in Canada, but once established it is most difficult to eradicate and very destructive to crops. Field Bindweed seeds are seldom present in Canadian or American commercial seed, but they are occasionally found in imported seed, particularly in beet and mangel seed.

All stocks of these seeds should be very carefully examined before sowing, and every Field Bindweed seed present removed by screening or handpicking. The seed closely resembles that of ordinary Morning Glory. They are liable to appear either as separate seeds or a few together in a seed ball. Farmers cannot be too careful in guarding against this menace.—Seed Branch, Ottawa.

EXTERMINATE WEEDS.

Of Great Importance In Management of Pastures.

The weed problem as it relates to the handling of pastures is a vital one, as weeds are not only unsightly but they also occupy land that should be engaged in the production of valuable forage. This is why it pays the farmer to battle the weeds as insistently as possible during the grass season. Some farmers keep a mowing machine running over their pastures most of the summer with very satisfactory results. Often weeds indicate depleted soil fertility. The poorest soils have more weeds than tame grasses, while on the richer soils the tame grasses tend to crowd out the weeds. In many instances a top dressing of stable manure or the feeding of cattle during the winter on a piece of land infested with broomsedge, which is composed in some sections of the blue grass, are effective in the extermination of this pest. Applications of acid phosphate or nitrate of soda, alone or in combination, have also been efficient in the eradication of broomsedge in addition to improving the stands of blue grass and white clover. Under existing conditions it is profitable to apply between 200 and 300 pounds of acid phosphate an acre every five years on the ordinary blue grass pastures.

SIR HARRY LAUDER.

Achieved Success as a Comedian First In Ireland.

Strange to say, Harry Lauder achieved success as a comedian first in Ireland. As an amateur he had appeared before audiences in Scotland, but it was not until he crossed the Irish Sea and made his debut in Belfast that he firmly established himself on the stage. His initial venture was a song entitled "Calaghan," a name that lent itself to punning. Who that remembers the Harry Lauder of the early days can forget the grotesque figure he cut when he sang:

Says I to Callaghan, you'll have to call agin,
To Callaghan to call again, says I;
Says I to Callaghan, you'll have to call again
For you haven't got your m-o-n-e-y.

To say that the famous Scottish comedian gained recognition through his effective baritone voice, his remarkable sense of humor, his queer antics, or his clever "patter" is to talk idly. No one of these would have suffliced, had he lacked the diligence and care with which he applied himself to every task confronting him. He is a finished artist, and as such never overlooks the smallest detail to produce effect, whether it be in the shake of the hand, the twist of the foot, the peculiar makeup, or the choice of song. He knows his audience in many cases better than it knows itself, and, when necessary, does not hesitate to tell it so. Let it ask for "Stop Yer Ticklin', Jock," "Tobermory," "I Love a Lassie" and some other familiar song in the same breath, and he will reply sharply: "You don't know what you want, so I'll just tell you a story," and he proceeds to do so. But if it is only a story he is relating he makes it his business to tell it perfectly. He takes his hearers into his confidence, whispers a secret about "Doughy the Baker," or the boy who, caught in the act of taking apples from a tree, declared that he was "only trying to stick on the apples that fell off," and leaves his listeners with the distinct impression that they have been admitted to the chamber of privacy. By such arts he commands attention.

And with versatility he shows when the occasion demands it! Let him sing "I love to be a sailor," and he brings to the stage a breath of the "briny deep"; let his depict "Doughy," and the Gallowgate is brought to view; hear him describe "The Wedding of Sachie Mactaggart," and the fun seems never ending. He catches the spirit of a gathering, seizes ridiculous situations, exaggerates them, and never spares himself to present them in the best possible way. Thus he maintains his position as the greatest Scottish comedian, and the first in his line to make himself a world figure.

Credit is due a man of his stamp. He never knew defeat, from the time he left Portobello to work in the flax mills of Arbroath, or pick his way through hard coal, in the light of a cruise, to earn enough to start him on the road to fame as an entertainer. He has always plodded on, despite many obstacles, carried his banner above his head when the battle seemed against him, and held straight to his course until his aims were accomplished. During the war he labored, without ceasing, to arouse democracy to "carry on" to victory. From early morn till night he sang the praises of the British army, paid tribute to the "lads of other lands who were fighting for freedom," and gave first place to no one in his efforts to repair some of the loss to which his country, with others, was subjected. His work for incapacitated soldiers still continues. To afford them the means of earning a livelihood is his first object. For this and other services to his country he has been honored. For all he has done no honor is too high. Of all the honors he has won, perhaps he will cherish none more than that which King George has conferred upon him, which places him on the records as Sir Harry Lauder. — The Christian Science Monitor.

Perfume.

Flowers are said to have a remarkable effect on the voice. One famous singer never dared to smell a rose, he said the perfume of a bouquet of flowers made his throat "off singing for a week." In several cases well-known singers have suffered from the odor of tuberoses, and a famous opera singer declares that the odor from a bunch of violets makes his voice quite husky.

Through the Looking Glass

By EVELYN NESBIT

When a man offers you the world with a fence around it, there may be a string tied to it. Watch out for the string.

It is foolish for a young girl to marry a man for the things he promises to give her after the knot is tied. So easy is the business of making promises that all young swains are prone to paint the future in brilliant colors. And the young girl nibbles and bites. Then she regrets it—when it is too late.

Don't marry in the hope that you may ride in a golden automobile, that you may have ice cream for dessert every day. Those are not the things that count. Don't marry for the sake of living in a hubby-to-be's fine five-story house, or for the sake of becoming part owner in his prosperous business. Watch out for the string.

Hubby-to-be may offer you his fine house as a home before you are married, but afterward he may expect you to run it for him as a boarding house. Hubby-to-be may offer you before you are married a partnership in his fine, prosperous business, but afterward he may expect you to sink your precious savings into it and lose them all.

Watch out for the string when you marry a man for the material good you may expect to get out of the match. If you have your eyes open somewhere you may learn that marriage founded on dollars and cents is a delusion and a snare. The woman who marries for the sake of having the world with a fence around it generally loses in the end.

CANADA'S KHAKI RECORD.

Soldiers From Dominion Won 17,000 Medals.

The report of the overseas military forces of Canada was tabled in the House of Commons recently by Sir Edward Kemp, Overseas Minister of Militia. Dealing with the Canadians in the Royal Air Force, the report says it will no doubt be a matter of surprise to many to hear that over 8,000 Canadians have held commissions in the air forces. The flying service appeals strongly to the individual character of the Canadian, and in that service he was an outstanding success.

An interesting table is given showing the comparative strength of the Imperial and Canadian Railway Construction Forces on the western front at the close of the various years of the war. While on December 13, 1914, Imperial Railway Construction Troops numbered 1,476, the situation had so changed on armistice day that Canadian Construction troops numbering 14,877 were in the field, while Imperial troops of the same class numbered only 7,230.

In addition there were four Canadian Railway troops operating companies with a strength of 1,687 on November 11, 1918, and 3,264 Canadian Railway troops in England. During their career at the front the personnel of the corps of Canadian troops were awarded 489 honors and decorations.

The report also shows that on armistice day the total strength of the Canadian Forestry Corps was 31,447, including 13 companies of prisoners of war, numbering 5,021. At the time the armistice was signed over 70 per cent. of the total timber used by the allied armies on the western front was supplied by the Canadian Forestry Corps.

The number of Canadian officers attached or seconded to the Imperial troops or other forces outside the military forces of Canada was 1,281 at the date of the armistice. Of these 824 were seconded or attached to the Royal Air Force, also on November 11, 1918, 384 officers were seconded to the War Office for military duties.

"It is gratifying to record," says the report, "that since the overseas military forces of Canada first went into action they have been awarded upwards of 17,000 medals, honors and awards, including 53 Victoria Crosses, 1,182 Military Crosses, 19 Distinguished Flying Crosses, 1,204 Distinguished Conduct Medals, and 6,610 Military Medals."

VERY NEAT DUVETYN COAT

Simplicity in lines is the keynote of this attractive green duvetyn coat. Practically the only deviation is found in the four little box plaits. There are self-piped button holes and fancy black and green buttons to match.

USES FOR ODDS AND ENDS

Save old ribbons of various colors, press with a hot iron and put them away to be used in mending old silk garments. The under seams of silk waists may be beautifully mended in this manner if you have a strip of ribbon the same color.

Often round dollies can be cut from the best part in such a way as to bring a pattern in the center. A border may be crocheted around this and pretty plate dollies made for ordinary use.

To make kitchen towels last longer when they begin to wear thin, place two together and stitch all around the edge, then lengthwise down the middle of the towel and once each side at the middle half way to the edge of the towel.

Linen collars which have been discarded make excellent bandages to use for cuts, burns and bruises. Soak them in water until soft, cut off the stitching, then dry and make into rolls ready for any emergency.

Old stockings, especially heavy fleeced ones, may be used to make underdrawers for small children. They are easily made by making a V seat.

The Gay Floral Toque.

Once again we have floral toques in our midst. This is the best of good news, for the floral toque in early spring, is a thing of beauty and a real joy to eyes wearied by the sight of gray, rather dreary, days and evenings. And then the floral toque is almost universally becoming. The leading milliners in Paris are showing these toques in several different forms; but personally I award the palm for beauty to the close-fitting Russian turban shape which I have sketched.

On a young and pretty girl, or woman, this is an ideal toque for early spring wear. It may be covered with any small flat flower, but roses, violets, hyacinths or scarlet japonica blossoms are perhaps the best of all. The model was covered with dull pink Bankata roses, and very lovely it was. Quite plain and simple, but full of rich and varied color, for the little roses were shaded—here and there dark.

This style of toque must be pressed close down on the head so that the hair at the back is almost covered. No fringe shows on the forehead, but coquettish curls are allowed to straggle forward over the ears. A toque of this kind made entirely of dark purple violets would be lovely; or of Parma violets mixed with dull blue hyacinths; or again with moss roses and soft green rose leaves.

For Correct Combination.

The correct thing to combine with such a toque as this is a large square throw-over veil made of taupe gray Russian net, with the border embroidered in silver threads. These taupe-colored veils are extremely becoming to bright complexions. They look remarkably smart when worn with all all-black hat or toque.

Floral toque covered with dull pink Bankata roses. A thing of beauty and a great relief from the dark gray days.

Jet and Velvet Hats for Late Winter.

For late winter wear there are some very attractive little hats of jet and velvet. The jet sequins are spangled all over with velvet, which is then connected into a becoming little hat with a puffed crown and a narrow brim. Some of these hats are cut with mitered crown, like a bishop's cap.

"Just can't work any more." The faded, jaded, over-worked woman, with pains here or there, should ask her neighbor for advice. Ten-to-one she was dragged down by the pains and ailments of her sex, and was completely cured by that temperance tonic made from wild barks and roots, and known for 50 years as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When a woman complains of backache, dizziness or pain—when everything looks black before her eyes—a dragging feeling, or bearing-down, with nervousness, she should turn to this "temperance" herbal tonic, known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It can be obtained in almost every drug store in the land and the ingredients are printed in plain English on the wrapper. Put up in tablets or liquid. Dr. Pierce, of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., will send a trial size for10-cents.

Tosoro, Ont.—"Dr. Pierce's Medicine has been a wonderful help to me and I recommend it in hope that others may be benefited by its use. When I was a girl I was always delicate. My mother thought she could never raise me. As I got older I grew worse; doctors said I would have to have an operation. I suffered at times untold agony. My mother started giving me 'Favorite Prescription,' and it finally cured me of all my trouble. After I married I used it again. My children are all healthy and strong. This medicine did wonders for me, saved me much suffering, and I can highly recommend it to weak women for their use in family."—Miss A. E. Ross, 118 Tecumseh Street.

Importation of Intestines.

Intestines are imported into the United States from China to the extent of nearly $400,000 worth a year. They are used by packing houses for sausage casings. The intestines are prepared for shipping at Shanghai, Hankow, or Tientsin by being scraped, cleaned and preserved with salt and salt water, and packed in oak barrels having a capacity of 2,500 to 3,000 bundles with about 30 per cent salt. Pig intestines are exported in a dried condition.

Environment Counts.

It is well to remember that environment has much to do with achievement. Associate only with those who are full of enthusiasm and determined to succeed. Keep close to people who encourage you. Create peace in the home. Make of it a harbor of refuge, a means of escape from a work-a-day world. If you will do this, you will soon find yourself well on the road to success.—Fern Howard.

Skilled in Fine Work.

One of the trades calling for the greatest skill is the making of compasses. This work had never been undertaken by women until dilution of labor became necessary. Of the infinite number of delicate parts demanding absolute accuracy, women have succeeded in making all but two or three and even these will shortly be to their credit.

Wake up, Ontario!

Let the Referendum Battle-Cry Be "No!"-"No!"-"No!"-"No!"

SINCE the announcement in the Legislature last spring that a Referendum on the Ontario Temperance Act would be taken this fall, the different temperance organizations of the province of Ontario have met together to consider what attitude they should take. The result has been the formation of the Ontario Referendum Committee, which comprises representatives from the organized temperance forces of the province and the temperance sentiment of the province outside of these organizations. The new Committee will conduct the Campaign. We are asking the voters of Ontario to vote "No" to all questions submitted on the ballot.

The Referendum Ballot
AND HOW TO VOTE

	Yes	No
1. Are you in favor of the repeal of THE ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT?.....		X
2. Are you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government agencies and amendments to THE ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT to permit such sale?.....		X
3. Are you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in standard hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favor such sale, and amendments to THE ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT to permit such sale?.....		X
4. Are you in favor of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government agencies and amendments to THE ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT to permit such sale?.....		X

By the Ontario Temperance Act, sale and distribution of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes within the province were prohibited. For practically three years the province has experienced the good effects of this law. Its repeal would be a calamity. Any of the amendments would spoil it.

For the Temperance forces to win they must secure four "No" majorities. That is, a majority for "No" on EVERY question. The Temperance forces will be defeated if there is a majority for "Yes" on any of the questions. You must mark an X after each of the four questions, or your ballot is counted as spoiled.

A century of temperance progress in this province is at stake in the coming Referendum. The Ontario Referendum Committee earnestly and respectfully ask you to mark your X in the "No" column after each and every question, as indicated in the sample ballot reproduced herewith.

Where formerly a buyer could go to a manufacturer and choose from large stocks, he is lucky now if he does not have to wait months for his order after the time it was promised to be shipped.

Our Stock is fairly complete. Last spring we bought in heavily, and now we have about 250 splendid Suits to sell at $7.50, $8.50, $10.00, $12.50, and $13.50, and their "to-day values" would be at least $2.00 to $3.50 higher than the prices we are asking. When these are gone, about the cheapest "worth while" Suit will be at least $15.00. Do you see the reason we urge upon you the necessity of prompt action, because where other seasons we have had about 400 Suits at these prices, now we only have 250 and they will not last long.
